VISUAL ARTIST

Amina Ansari is a British Asian Artist who is relatively new in the art scene. She is an up and coming painter from London who has a unique style for capturing the human figure on her canvases.

Her background and training in Fine Art has a figurative focus which gives her an edge over others.

She has recently been shown in the prestigious Houses of Parliament London and her work is part of Her Majesty's Windsor Castle collection. This really makes her a sought-after artist amongst many modern collectors of figurative art. Amina has a command over her subjects and paints them with a rigorous attention to detail. She has a South Asian palette and yet a modern British figurative sensibility. This combination allows her to absorb all the influences that East and West have to offer.

Her brush is bold and accentuates vibrancy and vivacity of strokes and expressions. Modern day figure painters are painting either in a photographic manner or are extremely stylised and hence lack painterly quality. Amina's work shows an artist who is confident and has so much to offer to a viewer. Her panache is evident from her work and the vigour in her figures is something to notice immediately.

She has an ability to show emotions through her confident strokes. Over the years she has matured as a painter who is able to deal with human issues and show injustices around us through her paintings. She has worked with the underprivileged and tried to address women's issues that are prevalent in our societies.

Amina has won many awards and prizes for her noticeable contribution as a young South Asian British female painter who has always tried to speak against violence amongst women and against social injustice. She has exhibited nationally and internationally and is continuously producing work, which shows her growth as a painter. Of course she does not only paint royalty and celebrities but certainly she has the talent to turn ordinary people into special and magical beings.

As the Maestro of Art Gulgee once said about Amina Ansari, "She has the dedication and sensitivity and I am sure will be a very fine artist and bring pride to her country and herself". Ismail Gulgee. London 20th Sept 1999.
